"Now glory to our Lord of hosts
From whom all glories are
And glory to our sovereign liege
King Henry of Navarre."

THE NAVARRE HOTEL of New York is most appropriately constructed in the French Renaissance style of architecture, and is one of the handsomest structures of its kind, not only in this country, but in the world. It is built and maintained strictly fire-proof throughout with its ten stately stories of steel construction, stone and brick walls, red tiled roof, and marble mosaic and terrazzo floors.

Among many hostelries of a great city the Navarre stands unique in this respect: It truly offers the maximum of comfort and luxury, at minimum cost. Its richness and high class appointments, while affording all that is attainable as to the substantial and elegant in hotel service, are to be enjoyed at rates reasonable beyond ordinary expectations.

The whole atmosphere of the house, though luxurious, is nevertheless homelike and comfortable; the management catering to the conservative tastes of those who require and appreciate such conditions. We are led to this reference to reasonable charge, because if judged by anything short of actual experience, one would never expect it.

Guests of the Navarre are within two hundred feet of Broadway, that "Lane of Life" in the great metropolis, and leaving its bustle and confusion one enters here a "House of Quiet." The difference is remarkable; the relief is real. Located on Seventh Avenue at Thirty-eighth Street, all varied activities and interests of the big city are right at hand, accessible when wanted. Electric street cars pass the Seventh Avenue entrance, connecting with all lines of transportation including Subway and Elevated to railroads, ferries and steamship lines throughout the city.

Important to the traveler is the fact that the new Pennsylvania Tunnel Terminal Station is but four short street blocks away, at Thirty-third Street and Seventh Avenue. On Forty-second Street, only four blocks north, stands the Grand Central Station and N. Y., N. H. & H. R. R., also the Times Square Station of the Subway. South, on Twenty-third Street, is the Erie, Lackawanna, C. R. of N. J., Reading and B. & O. R. Rs.

If there is one kind of pleasure indulged in more than another by the average citizen of New York, it is attendance at the play. Therefore is it that managers here are constantly offering the best to be had. The stranger within our gates is always interested when we tell him that The Navarre stands within five minutes' travel of thirty high-grade theatres. After the day's schedule one need not cut short his dinner to connect at any of the better playhouses in town. Provision is made nightly, for after-theatre suppers, where perfect service and fine music make restful the closing hours of the day. The principal shops and churches are of like accessibility.

Evidencing the individuality of decorations here is the fact that in three hundred and fifty rooms (with two hundred baths) no two are decorated alike. The appointments of these rooms include, in each instance, telephone, electric lights and every modern convenience. All rooms, besides, have windows opening to the outer air and sunlight, bathrooms not excepted. There are no dark rooms in this hotel. Every imaginable combination may be had, from a single room for one to the most elaborate and sumptuously appointed suites with private baths for familes or parties.
